Gee's $1.6 million pay leads pack of public university presidents

Other leaders of public universities earn far less

Monday, January 18, 2010 3:02 AM

BY ENCARNACION PYLE

THE COLUMBUS DISPATCH

Ohio State President E. Gordon Gee remains the top-paid publicuniversity leader in the country.

With a total compensation package of nearly $1.6 million, Gee was the only public-school leader to top $1 million for the 2008-09 school year, according to a Chronicle of Higher Education survey released today.

He was the highest-paid in 2007-08 as well, with a total package worth more than $1.3 million.

Only two other public-college leaders brought in more than $800,000 last year. University of Washington President Mark A. Emmert had a $905,004 package and University of Delaware President Patrick T. Harker had an $810,603 package.

By comparison, 23 private-college presidents were paid at least $1 million in 2007-08, according to The Chronicle. The newspaper does not have private-school data for the following year yet.

The median compensation package for public-college presidents last school year was $436,111 -- 2.3 percent more than in 2007-08. The increases the previous four years ranged from 7.6 percent to 18.9 percent annually, Chronicle Editor Jeffrey J. Selingo said.

pay packages, 2008-09 Tot	AL COMPENSATION
E. Gerden Gee, Ohio State University	$1,576,825
Mark A. Ensmert, University of Washington	$905.004
Patrick T. Harker, University of Delaware	$810,603
John T. Castoon III, University of Virginia	$797,048
Francisco G. Cigarroa, University of Texas system	$787.258
Ohio public-university presidents*
E. Gerden Gee, Ohio State University	$1,576,825
Nancy L Zimphor, University of Cincinnati	$653,223
Laster A. Lefton, Kent State University	$401,508
Lieyd A. Jacobs, University of Toledo	$585,473
David C. Hudge, Miarri University	$493,290
Rederick J. McDavis, Ohio University	$490,800
Michael Schwartz, Cleveland State University	$459,741
Lats M. Preenza, University of Akron	$448,900
Carol A. Cartweight, Bowling Green State University	$409,300
David R. Hopkiss, Wright State University	$367,448
* Does not include all of Ohia's public flow-year schools. Only doctoral/research universities with more than 10,000 student  Dees previolents have since resigned or extend. Source: The Orenside of Nigher Education
CLICK TO ENLARGE	DISPATC

GRAPHIC

1

E. Gordon Gee

The bad economy, fiscal crisis facing many states and scrutiny of big raises likely led to the slowdown, observers said.

"The economic meltdown has had a tremendous impact on big salaries across a lot of the nonprofit, independent and public sectors," said Lindalee A. Lawrence, president of Lawrence Associates, a Massachusetts-based compensation-consulting firm. "And there's no question the scrutiny is increasing."

Gee's total compensation includes $802,125 in base salary, a $500,000 supplemental retirement plan, $225,000 in deferred compensation and $49,700 in retirement pay. He also received club dues and use of a house and car.

"I hope I earn that salary every day," Gee said. "That's my goal."

Gee said his pay is commensurate with his position as the nation's most experienced college president. He has led five schools over nearly 30 years. He also was the highest-paid college leader in the country while at Vanderbilt University before he returned to Ohio State.

As with a growing number of college leaders, Gee has given money back to his school since the economic downturn.

In the 2008-09 school year, he pledged $1 million to create an endowed fund at Ohio State that will cover tuition and fees for one student at each class rank for four years.

This academic year, Gee gave his raise and bonus -- worth $220,000 -- to student scholarships.

To view the Chronicle's database of public university executive compensation, go to http://chronicle.com/stats/990/public.htm.

epyle@dispatch.com

Read all 39 comments »

©2010, The Columbus Dispatch, Reproduction prohibited